

ABSTRACT

[0047] An ironing board that folds in half to occupy only about one half its extended length to facilitate packaging and storage. An iron rest can be slid to latch the folded front and rear sections of the board. The board has front and rear legs allowing it to be set up on top of a table. The rear legs incorporate clamp mechanisms that allow the ironing board to be clamped onto a table edge so that clothing that is being pressed can hang freely from the edges of the ironing board without bunching up on the table top.
